I.

I, i', or âé, n. Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant.—Johnson. By what contact of the organs is the consonant sound produced?
 —J. K.

I, vowel, has a long sound, as fine, thine, which is usually marked by an e final; and a short sound, as fin, thin. Prefixed to e, it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, ee: thus,
field, yield, are spoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is spoken frend. Subjoined to a or e, it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to o, makes a mingled sound, which approaches to the notion of a diphthong, as oil, coin. The sound of i before another i, and at the end of a word, is always expressed by y.—Johnson.
 There is only one vowel sound in field, feild. “Oi, oil, coin, approaches to the notion of a diphthong.” —Johnson. It does not “approach the notion;” but it touches the sound, “of a diphthong,” for it is actually a full one, composed of â and é, both long, âé, âê, âî, kâéu.—J. K.

Now the consonants, as Mr. Sheridan says, are the "nerves and sinews of a language;" and nothing contributes more to clearness, distinctness, and force, in the delivery of a public reader, or speaker, than his perfecting the articulation of every consonant, which custom will allow to be sounded in the common pronunciation of every word in the language.—J. K.

ORIGIN, ó-r-í-j-ín, n. } Beginning. Fountain;

ORIGINAL, ó-r-í-j-ín-ál, n. } source. First copy.

Descend. To my surprise, I find that not only Mr. Walker, the mere copyist in general of Mr. Sheridan, doubles the r in origin, ó-r-írdz-ín, but Mr. Sheridan also. It is probable that this harsh pronunciation may have been common in Mr. Sheridan's time, but Mr. Walker, who came after him, should have removed the harsh and unnecessary repetition of the r, which makes a word disagreeable, that otherwise would not be unpleasant to the ear.
